

Plumber adds more licensed contractors

Locally founded Plumbing M.D. recently had its fourth technician receive a state contractors license. The contractor, Gary Hall, has been with the company since 2004 and has 12 years of plumbing experience. Under the state law, a company is required to have just one licensed contractor, but Plumbing M.D. encourages and pays for the training.

A contractor's license allows plumbing technicians to own their own plumbing companies and hire other technicians to work under them.

Founder and CEO Michael Farias explains that "the process of getting a license confirms the ability of the technician and enables them to better serve the customer."

The licensing of technicians is part of Plumbing M.D.'s larger business picture, which is to assist its technicians in acquiring their own franchise, expanding the company.
